Chapter 1: Introduction and advice for Fallout

Welcome!

Hello, prospective Overseer (GM)! The nuclear holocaust may have finally come, but hey, at least you're in charge! That means you don't have to listen to any of the advice written here, but equally you could find it helpful. Run things your way, that's the joy of being Overseer!

Setup

Fallout: Moribund World can be 'crunch' heavy in areas and as such it's recommended to run this system with a computer at hand. Either from behind a desktop or a laptop. Hopefully the Overseer's Manual and the Rulebook itself will have been bundled with the appropriate premade Excel calculators for combat and character creation in order to make things run a little smoother. This may sound off-putting, but from experience it quickly becomes easy to get into the groove.

An additional recommendation is using tokens of some-kind to allow players to track their Action Points (AP) during combat. A particularly fitting token might be bottle caps.

Music

Fallout is at its core dark, cynical but it also has humour as part of its mutant DNA. To communicate Fallout's strong atmosphere, playing music consistently throughout your sessions makes for a nice tone-setter. For instance, dark ambient soundtracks from the likes of Mark Morgan or Aphex Twin whilst your players explore the scorched desert Wasteland. Contrasted, then, with fast-paced cheery tunes of the 40s or 50s whilst they battle its various blood-thirsty inhabitants come highly recommended.

Player Themes and Character "Moments"

To give your Players (and their characters) a bit of unique flair and allow for some especially memorable moments, allow them to pick a theme that suits their particular character. It's highly recommended that the theme be a tune from the 40s or 50s rather than anything contemporary, or similarly a (fitting) orchestral soundtrack.

This theme is then played whenever the player uses a "Character Moment", a single expendable (non-stackable) token awarded to individual players for particularly excellent roleplaying or participation at the table.

When a "Character Moment" occurs, it allows said character to instantly Critically Succeed at any action, task or check. If this action is an Attack, the Attack is upgraded to a Critical Hit with +20% on the Critical Table.

It is recommended that each Player Character start with a Character Moment at the beginning of a campaign in order to establish their definitive theme early-on (Assuming they survive, of course).

Chapter 2: Bestiary

Section 1: Critters

Rats

By far the most common creatures in the wastes (and I'm not just referring to the New York City subway system), rats and their relatives have done very well for themselves since the bombs dropped. There are plenty of the nasty, black variety around, but radiation changed some of these disease-ridden vermin into fearsome creatures.

Giant Cave Rat

This is basically a larger version of a rat. Giant rats' range in size from about a foot - the size of a cat - to almost a yard (meter) in length. They are covered with brown or black fur, and have black, glassy, beady eyes. Rats are readily identifiable by their tail, as it looks like a worm sticking out of their rear end. They are not openly hostile towards humans unless they are hungry, but packs have been known to attack when they smell blood. Giant rats can be found pretty much anywhere

Rad Rat

Rats can survive large doses of radioactivity, and in certain areas, have even adapted such that they require the radiation to live. These rats are about 30 centimetres long, are grey or white in color, and will glow slightly in the dark. The main thing to fear in encountering Rad Rats is that they are slightly radioactive, and their little claws can transfer some of that to YOU. Rad Rats are usually found around sources of radioactivity.

Molerats (Lesser/Greater)

Molerats are a mix between moles and rats. No one is sure whether these creatures are the result of a creative union between similar species, or an even stranger union with a little radiation to help things along the way. Molerats range in size anywhere from 30 centimetres to a meter and a half; the largest stand almost a meter at the shoulder. They have mole-like faces and are nearly blind in normal light; for this reason, they are almost exclusively found in caves. Lesser molerats are the smaller naked version, Greater molerats are the huge, hairy, ugly ones.

Pigrat

Pigrats are part-pig, part rat hybrids. Like their cousins the molerats, it probably took some creative radioactive genetic manipulation to make these critters. Pigrats are large, ranging anywhere from 70 cm to almost 2 meters in length, and incorporate the best (worst?) of the two species. Their legs are overly large, although short, and they are exceptionally meaty around the midsection. In fact, Pigrats would make exceptional livestock, if they weren't so dangerous. They are amazingly resilient, and can be found almost anywhere. They travel in packs of ten or more and generally attack only to protect their young or defend their territory. If they are hungry, however, they become very aggressive.

Insects

The next most common type of Wasteland critter next to rats, but more diverse in species and typically much more dangerous. Insects are historically hardy, and not even mass atomic warfare could cleanse the earth of those damn bugs.

Rad Roach

One of the most numerous and adaptive of all species that evolution spit upon this planet, cockroaches existed on every continent before the War. After the bombs flew, they still managed to hold on to their niche, especially in ruins of cities with lots of dark, dirty areas for them to crawl through. Cockroaches range anywhere from an inch in length to 60 cm, but only the "giant" variety is dangerous. They can be encountered alone, but the most common - and deadly - species travels in clusters of 10-20 individuals. They do not make a habit of attacking humans, but will defend their garbage heaps, and large swarms of these creatures can easily overwhelm a person or a small group. Usually, cockroaches will call off the attack if their target flees

Giant Ant

Giant Ants, or GiAnts, are simply overgrown insects. Somewhere along the way, fate saw fit to dump some radioactive material near an anthill and create this large, mutant creature. GiAnts are black ants about 70 centimetres' in length. Huge colonies of these creatures exist under the earth, and scouts are often found in caves. GiAnts usually travel in parties of 5 to 10 insects. They will attack humans on sight, and enjoy eating corpses of the dead.

Mantis (Lesser/Greater/Giant)

These giant, mutant insects come from the praying mantis, a creature nearly extinct before the War. They have since become a popular sight in the post-War Americas (particularly around the Great Salt Lake), and are known to devour crops and cattle. On rare occasions, a pack of mantis will attack humans. Their size varies greatly, with Lesser Mantises being roughly the size of a Pre-War dog, Greater Mantis reaching the size of a human, and Giant Mantis reaching the size of large vehicles. Lesser Mantis travel in swarms of 10-15, Greater Mantis will travel in packs of 4-8 and Giant Mantis oftentimes only travel in pairs.

Scorpions (Bark Scorpion/Radscorpion)

Another common denizen of the western desert was the scorpion. This species got a second lease on life when radiation from the War allowed it to grow to gargantuan proportions. Radscorpions range in size from 50 cm to 2 meters in length, and range in color from pale white to brown and black. Their wicked tails contain sacs of venom, and are tipped with a stinger almost 15 cm long. Radscorpion tails are considered valuable, since the powerful Anti-Venom is made from a distilled version of the venom inside the sacs. Radscorpions can be encountered in groups of up to 8, or alone. They prefer shady areas, and can often be found in canyons or caves. Radscorpions are rarely encountered in the open desert, or in areas of high vegetation.

Cazadores (Young/Adult)

Quite possibly one of the nastiest critters in the post-nuclear Wasteland. A Cazadore is a gigantic, mutated Tarantula Hawk with the deadliest venom in post-atomic America. They have distinctive amber-orange wings, a blue-black carapace and blood-red eyes. They have a fast and rather erratic flight movement. The spikes on their back inflate and deflate when idle and attacking, likely being a form of respiration. They build great nests and travel in swarms. They're typically found in the southwestern regions, such as the Utah canyonlands and the Mojave Wasteland.

Reptiles

Less common and varied in species than Rats or Insects, Reptiles also survived the nuclear holocaust, and have become a staple of their respective regions.

Geckos (Silver/Gold/Fire)

A mutation of the smaller pre-War lizard, Geckos are large desert-dwelling reptiles that walk on their hind legs and attack with their front, which have developed sharp claws for tearing. Highly prized for their strong pelts, Geckos are routinely hunted in some places, although a pack of them can easily kill one or two inexperienced hunters. Geckos stand about 150 cm tall, and the larger, more dangerous Golden Gecko is about 180 cm tall. They travel in packs of anywhere from 4 to 20 animals.

Canines

Surprisingly, dogs managed to survive the War, and even thrive in the post nuclear environment. Domesticated dogs, which are more resistant to radiation than your average human, "turned feral" after the bombs hit, and packs of them now roam the wastes. In addition, there are a few domesticated pooches still out there, and coyotes still make trouble for domesticated animals like Brahmins and Pigrats.

Livestock

After the War, most kinds of life from pre-War America were changed into almost unrecognizable forms. Cows managed to escape that fate, for the most part, except that only a very hardy breed survived (or a cross between several hardier breeds). Brahmin are the main source of beef and leather in the wastes, and they can be found almost everywhere, although they are usually in enclosures. Some areas have vast Brahmin ranches, rivalling the huge Texas ranches of pre-War times. Brahmin are also used as pack animals, hauling wagons for caravans. They are hardy animals and can survive on very little food. They are tolerant of extreme environmental conditions, weathering the scathing heat of a summer's day as well as the bitter cold of the desert winter nights. Brahmin are easily distinguishable by their two heads, although rumours of herds of one-headed Brahmin far in the east occasionally make their rounds. Most people don't subscribe to that hogwash, however. Brahmin are almost always docile unless attacked directly; then, the herd will attempt to defend themselves.

Robots

A robot is a machine that is capable of autonomously completing tasks. Depending upon the robot, these tasks may be simple or complex and may require little human intervention or complete oversight. In the Fallout universe, robots had been constructed for many purposes, and many examples survived long enough to be a factor in the Fallout world. Some of the robots in the Fallout universe will attack on first glance but most of the robots will just aid you in battle and come across friendly. Robots had been constructed by pre-War society to fill all niches and occupations. From general-purpose utility droids to full-fledged military battle machines, robots could be found in almost any environment and function.

Mutants and Freaks

Whether these creatures came from another planet, or are some horrible twisting of genetic material found on earth, is a question left to the scientists. Since scientists are now few and far between, one guess is as good as another as to where these unusual critters originated. All have one thing in common. Somehow, normal weapons like guns and bullets don't seem to hurt them much at all, nor does beating on them with fists or melee weapons. Only fire, laser, and plasma weapons are truly effective against these creatures. Recent evidence seems to suggest that these creatures are, in fact, early products of FEV virus research, but this rumour cannot be verified.

Special Encounters:

Special Encounters 1d10	Name:	Description:
1	Café of Broken Dreams	After a particularly harsh day walking in the desert, you encounter a pristine Pre-War diner (Bright glowing neon and all) in the middle of the sand, a soft welcoming orange glow emanates from the windows. [PAUSE]. Upon entry, the diner is in full operation, with soft jazz music playing from a jukebox. Two men in armoured vault-suits sit at the bar, and in a nearby booth a man in power-armor and an olive-skinned young woman seem to be talking something out. The bar is staffed by a friendly older man with grey hair, a strong chin and a booming, deep voice. The barman offers the party a free milkshake on the house, and tells them they can sit anywhere they like, except for the spare seat next to the two vault-dwellers, as that's reserved. The barman already seems to know each of the party, and as a parting gift offers them an answer to one question posed, and he'll try and answer as best he can. He's a knowledgeable type. When the party leaves the diner, in the blink of an eye the diner becomes a charred, burnt out husk, and the memory of the Café becomes dreamlike.
2	Cacti-People	As you traverse the road, you see a cluster of cacti nearby. Unusually, however, they're shaped like people in static positioning, rooted to the ground. When cut open they're full of red, bleeding unidentifiable flesh.
3	Thunderbird	As you're walking one day in the midday sun, you are suddenly covered in great shadow as said sun is blocked out entirely. The party looking upward reveals a seemingly gigantic bird of prey drifting slowly in the sky distantly above, the size of a car. It flies over the party, seemingly uncaring of their presence, before suddenly turning and flying to the horizon eastward.
4	Chiller	Whilst walking through the desert, you hear distant music (Let's Go Sunning) and spot the source in the middle of the desert: A skeleton sat in a deckchair, wearing a Hawaiian shirt and mirrored sunglasses, with an empty beer bottle in hand. A (still functional) beer cooler sits next to the chair, on top of it a gramophone endlessly loops a vinyl record with the song in question playing. Inside the cooler are x 12 Beers. Sunglasses, if taken, provide +1 Luck when in active equipment. "Lucky Shades"
5	Mirage?	Whilst walking at the peak of midday, you notice a group walking ahead just on the horizon, (group no. same as party) but due to the distance and heat haze, they are simply blurs. They remain in this fashion, just on the horizon ahead, for several hours as you walk. At one point, one of the figures ahead drops their pack, and stops to pick it up, stopping for a moment to look back. Eventually, the distant group disappears in the haze of the horizon. (At this point one of the party drops their pack and must pick it up), as you lean over to pick it up, and look back behind you, you see a miraged party on the horizon tailing behind you (of the same no. as the party)
6	Desert Boulders	As you are walking through the desert, you come across a collection of massive stone boulders sat firmly in the desert sand. You weave between them and pass by with no trouble. (Allow them to walk a bit further). You hear a series of scraping noises behind you. (If they turn around). The boulders all appear closer than they were before, and a trail in the sand lies behind each one from their original positions. (This continues, the boulders never moving whilst they look, for a little while longer until the party stops to move to investigate, then they don't move any further).

7	Pariah Dog	As you are walking through the desert, you spot the site of seemingly a massacre. A ring of about 30 bodies lays scattered in the dust. Each body in a pool of blood, at the centre of this ring is a normal looking black dog, sitting patiently wagging its tail and panting. (If the party enters the ring of bodies, the entire party makes a Luck check. The dog approaches whoever fails with the largest margin.) The dog approaches you; do you pet it? (If pet, the player gains +5% to their critical fail)
8	Nuka-Truck	You see an overturned red truck in the distance "Nuka-Cola" on the side. (If the party approaches and opens) The back of the truck opens up, and a sea of bottle caps begins to pour out onto your feet in the sand. Amount of caps determined by combined party LUCK Party Luck > 30: 8,443 Caps Party Luck > 20: 5,709 Caps Party Luck > 14: 2,967 Caps Party Luck > 7: 1,645 Caps
9	Path of the Borealis	In the midst of the desert, you spot a hulking mass of rusting metal. As you approach closer, it appears to be the wreck of a sea vessel, a large pre-war ship half buried in the sand. The name "Borealis" is painted faintly on the side of the ship's maroon red hull. It is unclear how it arrived here.
10	A Space Oddity	Out in the desert, you spot a crater. Though not entirely charred as common with bomb craters. [If the party approaches]. You find advanced old-world wreckage strewn about at the bottom of this sandy crater, clearly this has been here for some time. At the center is the split open remains of some sort of metallic capsule bearing the Old-World flag. Inside, decayed and rusted out computer equipment lines the walls, and a smashed out (now filled with sand) porthole window at the eastern side. In the middle of this sunken capsule sits the skeleton of a man inside some sort of strange white suit, with a large glass helmet. On his suit chest is a tag with the name: "Major Tom". (Spacesuit can be used as strong radiation suit.)
